

The Jeffersonian.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1876.

Our distinguished neighbor over the way, we are pleased to say, continues on in his good behavior. He can be nothing if he can't be Democratic; and as he is harmless in his efforts that way, doing no particular amount of good to friends and less harm to democracy's opposition, it is just as well that he be allowed to tickle his fancy and maintain his equilibrium that way as any other. Continue on thus neighbor; and if you manage to steer clear of the demented vapporings of the New York Sun, of whose brains you were much given to make use in the past, the prospects are cheering that you may yet succeed in making a man of yourself.
